Ask yourself this question:

Why would the @SEC_Enforcement object or get involved in this subpoena?

Clayton and his new employer are part of the private sector. @Ripple served a subpoena on them. I'm pretty sure that One River has lawyers that can move to quash the subpoena.

Note this motion confirms #Ripple subpoenaed Clayton's subsequent employer to establish a financial motivation for the suit because they invest exclusively in BTC & ETH. The SEC is protesting, but it has been introduced in court as a part of discovery. twitter.com/CryptoLawUS/st...

Why would the SEC be involved in objecting to a third party subpoena?

Thread#ETH and #XRP must be turned over. This subpoena is related to that.

It's about the same issue that the judge said is relevant - it's only asking a third party to provide what's in their possession. Maybe Clayton sent emails from a private email account. It is absolutely appropriate to ask for this and it's consistent with the judge's ruling.

So why in the world would the SEC defend against a subpoena issued on a third party? It's their fight not the SEC's fight.

WTH is the SEC afraid will be discovered?

It's shameful and on its face appears conspiratorial.

I think Jay Clayton is actually a double agent working for Ripple.

regarding discovery, is it the honor system? They give Ripple what they want and Ripple has to trust that they gave everything?
